

Trauma and Addictions: A Treatment Approach

Over the last few years, research has clearly demonstrated that Trauma and Substance Abuse are frequently linked together. It would seem that abusing substances is often the primary, unhealthy way people use to cope with the aftermath of the trauma event. In the past, all too often, therapists have tried to treat this co-occurring disorder separately, or sequentially. Often they might have ignored one disorder to treat the other. This has not been very helpful to the person being treated. Both issues must be acknowledged and treated at the same time.

This workshop focuses on helping to identify Trauma (PTSD) and Substance Abuse as a frequent Co-occurring Disorder, and describes an overview on a treatment approach utilizing Trauma Informed Services techniques. The workshop will be helpful for people working with clients who have experienced significant trauma in their lives.

Participants will learn:

- To identify a working definition of trauma
- To be able to list 2 common reactions of trauma in each of 5 life domains
- To list 4 standards for Trauma Informed services for your organization
- To describe the 3 Stages of Healing
- To list the 4 steps in every session
